

MEN AND WOMEN ARE CARRIED OUT THROUGH FLAMES

A score of people, including a blind man and several women, were carried down ladders or burning stairways during a fire early today that burned out the interior of the four-story brick apartment house at Nos. 5 and 6 Oxford terrace, Back Bay. Thirty others who were awakened to find the flames bursting into their apartments fled panic-stricken to the street. The loss is estimated at $20,000.

When she had reached the street she immediately became hysterical and shouted that her blind husband was still in the burning building. She was then taken to the hospital. She hastened up the ladder again and entered the window. They found Mrs. Potter Palmer.

The fire started in the basement of the building and the flames, spreading to the second floor, were seen by neighbors who called the police.

A moment later a wagon load of policemen from the Italian arena station arrived up the hill and searched the area, declaring up to the Palmer mansion, and then back down the hill again. The name of the man who later was charged with the murder of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., James Earl Ray, was not mentioned.

Bertha Naugel, who lives in Suite on the top floor, was awakened by the striking of flames to find the bath room her apartment abaze and the air shaft smoking.

Quickly winding a towel about her head she rushed to the door and threw it ransomed her husband, who fled to the street and sounded an alarm. Mrs. Nau then awakened Mrs. Annie Sullivan, a motorist, and Mrs. and Mr. Mandelbaum, who occupied suite 818 and the bar, and who had also seen the fire, tied up the stairs to the street.

In the meantime several other families fled from the hotel, but had no time to call the fire department. The fire broke out in the dining room, the kitchen, the bar, and the lounge.

rumbling out of the apartment into smoke-filled hallways, George Louas, a janitor, hastened from floor to floor to warn the tenants. The flames gave him from the building.

Mrs. Bertha Sheppard and Mrs. Harry Clark were caught in their suite, 6B on the second floor. The women had been awakened by firemen. Mrs. Clark and her husband were in the burning building, but men who hatched the plot from the rooming house and did not leave any trace of him. It later developed that the man was named by Sergeant Brown of the Park Bay police station, who asked him down the stairs to the street.

Among those rescued were Mildred Smith and Mrs. George Lewis, a patrolman's wife. They were taken to the police station, waking occupants of the house and setting in carrying out a number of people by the city of New York.

Bring This Bargain List to HARRISON'S Clothing Store!

There are two reasons for printing this advertisement in the way we do. One is for our own convenience, and the other is for yours.

When you call at the S. H. HARRISON CO. Store today or tomorrow bring this list with you. Cut it out of the paper right now and have it in your pocket so that you may show the salesman who waits on you just the bargain you wish to examine.

At 662 to 672 Washington Street,
 Corner of Beach Street,
 the policy is to let the public have just what they want. The Harmon advertising is in a plain statement of clothing facts—arranged in easy form for reference—not a mere jumble of pictures and an array of prices thrown together to induce you to come here and let the salesman sell you something you have no intention of buying.

Choose the article you desire, make your appeal to you—have the advertisement in your hand—and tell the salesman which one you wish to buy if it is satisfactory. This will save your time and ours.

Read every entry carefully.

"THE FRONT-THAT-WON'T-BREAK-DOWN"
Study the above expression carefully. It is the most imitative of any expression ever invented by a tailoring house. We were years in perfecting a system of building coat fronts in such a way that they would always stand up and look like new. After getting our design perfected—without flaws—and receiving the thankful endorsement of thousands and thousands of satisfied wearers of our clothes, we decided to protect the public and ourselves.
So we registered the design of "The front-that-won't-break-down" at the State House. It is our "trade-mark." No tailor in Massachusetts can use the expression, "The front-that-won't-break-down." It is your protection against fraud.
Every coat made in our shop is made after this famous design. But no extra charge is made for it, even though it cannot be obtained anywhere else.
Our prices for suits (on overcoats) are $15 to $25, and at these prices we give the equal of any other tailor's $30 to $40 offerings. Some tailors cannot equal our clothes at any price. No tailor can give you "The front-that-won't-break-down." We carry the biggest line of new woolsens in Boston. We have to do so to accommodate our increasing business. Mr. Hamlin's Platform Is Timely and Interesting

An Exposition of Admirable Issues and a Strong Appeal for a Union of Progressive Citizens in Behalf of Great Reforms

One of the candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor, Charles S. Hamlin, has announced his platform.

By doing so he has set a good example. So long as we have State conventions, it is eminently proper that delegates should know the political creed of every man who aspires to the high nominations within their gift.

When all nominations for public office are made in primaries by direct vote, every candidate will feel obliged to declare his attitude relative to important questions.

Under a direct primary system the candidate who would refuse or neglect to show his colors would stand a poor show. And the successful candidate who would betray his colors would read himself out of public confidence.

Mr. Hamlin, in presenting, at this early stage of the campaign, a list of reforms which he firmly believes are for the best interest of the people of the Commonwealth, has done a good thing. He has presented an unusually good, sound platform, one that could commend him and it to the Democratic convention and will impress favorably every earnest student of political conditions, partisan and non-partisan.

Here is the Hamlin platform. Read it carefully. Study it. You will find it in line with the best thought of the day:

- "Immediate repeal of the unjust taxation of the Dingley and Payne-Aldrich tariff acts.
- "The referendum.
- "A just apportionment of representative and senatorial districts.
- "Direct election of United States Senators.
- "Direct nominations for city, county and State offices.
- "A consolidation of State commissions.
- "An expert investigation of every department and institution of the State.
- "A purchasing agent for all State supplies.
- "Rigid regulation of public utilities.
- "Preservation of the right of self government for towns and municipalities.
- "Abolition of wage controversies.
- "Abolition of the lobby.
- "The passage of the income tax amendment to the national constitution.
- "Conservation of our natural resources.
- "Preservation of the constitutional rights and faithful performance of constitutional duties of the sovereign States by legislative co-operation between the national government and one another."

Whether the Democratic State convention nominates Mr. Hamlin or someone else—and the American is not booming any particular one of the three gentlemen seeking that honor—it will build widely and substantially if it incorporates the Hamlin platform into its declaration of principles.

As Mr. Hamlin himself points out in the preamble of his statement, to be forgotten that the principles which the candidates and their party are to make the coming fight are of much greater importance than in the success of any individual."

That is sound advice. It is highly important to keep it in mind. And it is also true, as he declares, but too often a slighted truth, that "a candidate owes it to the party and to the people to state squarely his position and his beliefs in advance of the nomination."

Surely, Mr. Hamlin is entitled to credit for a timely political appeal of unusual force and interest. One of the best things about it is the spirit of it. It is broad gauge. There is no narrow partisanship in its lines or frame.

"I believe," he says, "present conditions demand a union of progressive citizens of all political faiths in behalf of these great reforms." There, in a sentence, is expressed the hope of every honest man—a union of progressive citizens of all political faiths in behalf of great and ready needed reforms.

A Good Plank in the New York Republican Platform

Too Short, but Sound in Principle

Copyright, 1910, by American Journal Company

The Republican party of New York State issues the usual long platform in which it pats itself and its leaders on the back.

There is in this document one paragraph which is new, and which perhaps will be remembered long after the men and the parties of to-day are forgotten.

The paragraph reads: "We favor conservative State action in the prevention and cure of tuberculosis."

The fight against consumption is a battle worthy of any party, any individual State or nation.

If public men realized the importance of saving human lives, consumption would be stamped out in the United States within a generation.

Tens of thousands die every year—the deaths are so numerous and regular that they are taken for granted.

If we had in the United States to-day one-half or one-tenth the number of deaths from Asiatic cholera that we have from consumption there would be nothing else talked about in the country.

The condition is a disgrace to a nation with unlimited money and the scientific knowledge to use the money.

Everybody knows that tens of thousands will die of consumption this year.

Everybody knows that in the single city of New York thousands upon thousands every year needlessly contract consumption in their childhood—and of these practically all might be saved.

At least the platform of the Republicans recognizes the fact that government has duties to perform outside the mere realm of politics.

Nervo, the Monk

Better Than Forts

Lucia Ames Mead Objects to the Fortification of the Panama Canal and Urges Neutralization as a Feasible Solution of the Problem

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN: The primary cause for increased cost of living, says the Massachusetts Legislative Committee which investigated it, is waste, and among these it calls the loss from increased cost of armaments the chief. Our own government spends over 70 per cent of its revenue in paying for past war and in preparation for future war. Yet the editor of the BOSTON AMERICAN has just made a powerful appeal to the public to enter on a new expenditure and declare every person an "idiot" who spending the colossal sum necessary to keep the canal fortified. (A proper fortification of the canal is agreed upon, and is a very different matter.) It declares that we are like a "house surrounded with sand and the doors left open" if we refuse the appropriations for this purpose. The average housekeeper does not make a distinction between the increased household budget and the Panama Canal. The average young man is a hundred times as much interested in the "Red Box" as in public questions which concern not only his own pocket but the world's welfare. The average business man is too busy with his own affairs to care. Like a Russian peasant he leaves such matters to the higher powers. It is easy therefore to throw dust in all their eyes. The clever journalist mentions no alternative to fortifications but disaster. That neutralization is an equal protection, that it costs nothing, that it would enormously help to promote further world federation and the substitution of law for war, he absolutely ignores. Representative Bartholdt, a prominent member of the Interparliamentary Union, is reported as saying: "The canal can be made perfectly safe for hundreds of years to come by a few hours' work in the shape of an agreement between this country and other countries." The hundred years' peace between the United States and Canada have been chiefly due to the "self-declaring ordinance"—not even a treaty—which excluded battleships and forts along our 5300 miles of frontier.

Neutralization Was Successful at Suez

The neutralization of the Panama Canal is a feat which the United States is as feasible as the existing neutralization of the Suez Canal. The original agreement with Great Britain in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which at Constantinople, Turkey declares that "we are bound by solemn treaty obligations to see to it that the canal shall be open to the commerce of all nations in time of war as well as in time of peace." It is a question whether there is no reason why we should not make the same agreement with Japan and other nations. As to Japan, we know it is possible that we should ever be at war with her. It is certain that we are now Hawaii she could have no cooling station and would attack Alaska or Seattle instead of a distant spot like the Panama, where she would be crippled by lack of coal.

Fortifications Would Invite Bombardment

Briefly stated the facts the public need to know are these: In the words of the gentleman David J. Foster, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, "The canal would be not less than $25,000,000 and in all probability it would exceed $50,000,000. Against this expenditure he makes strong protest and points out that "fortifications or no fortifications our battleships would be placed at each entrance of the canal. Under conditions extremely changed, a hostile fleet with no naval station within reasonable distance would find it difficult even to attack us in connection with the canal." This of course is with the assumption that we were likely sometimes to be attacked. But we must reason from the known to the unknown. The known facts are (1) that since we became a republic in 1789 we have never yet been attacked. We began all our three foreign wars and lost by foreign bullets, all told, only one-tenth the number whom we allow to die every year by preventable tuberculosis.

(2) Congress, last June, voted unanimously for a constitution of five appointed by the President to consider with other nations what steps can be taken towards general
